

Resolved International Criminal Prosecution Challenges

Overview

When a U.S. firm was facing criminal allegations related to a foreign acquisition, we stepped in with diplomatic and legal tools to secure a settlement.

Problem

- Our client acquired a European telecommunications company as a result of the government's privatization of formerly state-owned companies.
- When the venture failed, a host country court alleged criminal bankruptcy by four executives.

Strategy

- Our strategy brought political and diplomatic support to the efforts to resolve the cases in the country, leading to a successful resolution to criminal litigation that had dragged for years. We enlisted the support of senior U.S. officials to convey to the host country government that the allegations were without foundation and the unfounded criminal prosecutions would deter foreign investment.
- We worked to activate leading Members of Congress, executive branch officials, the U.S. Ambassador, and others in the diplomatic service to engage with the host country government.
- Our legal team simultaneously engaged with the Department of Justice to guard against spillover of legal issues into the United States.

Results

- With the host country government supporting a resolution, the company and executives reached a favorable settlement that limited the company's financial exposure and dismissed the criminal actions against the executives.
